

IMPERIAL RECORD DEPARTMENT

PRESS-LIST OF
'MUTINY PAPERS'
1857

INTRODUCTION

I

The papers which are press-listed here were in the custody of the Commissioner of Delhi and were transferred to the Imperial Record Dept by the Punjab Government in 1899. Some of the papers are in Persian, but the majority are in Urdu. There are some papers in English, mostly translations of the Urdu and Persian papers. They are of various sizes and are grouped in 201 bundles, roughly classified; each bundle has been separately press listed. These papers are mostly records found in the Palace or in the Camp of the rebel army by the British troops after the capture of Delhi. There are some letters from English spies, a paper containing the defence of the ex-King, some Urdu and Persian newspapers of the time and extracts from others, certain private letters including a few pre-Mutiny papers having no bearing on the Mutiny¹.

II

These papers must have been brought together for the purpose of the trial of Muhammad Bahadur Shah, ex-King of Delhi. Translations of some of the important papers have been published in the printed proceedings² relating to the trial. The Military Commission before whom the ex-King was arraigned was presided over by Lt Col M. Dundas of the Bengal Horse Artillery and the prosecution was conducted by the Deputy Judge-Advocate-General Major J. F. Harriott of the 3rd Light Cavalry. Mr James Murphy, Deputy Collector of Customs, acted as the Interpreter. Of Mr Murphy, Sir John Lawrence wrote as follows —

“This gentleman unaided by any Munsifi translated all the numerous and difficult documents adduced at the trial, he also read the originals before the Court and conducted the examination of the native witnesses. The translations are believed to be exceedingly faithful, and the circumstance that he was able to dispense with native assistance in the work secured secrecy and other advantages and evinced eminent attainments as an Urdu and Persian scholar”.

The proceedings partook rather of the character of a court of enquiry than of a judicial tribunal. As the life of the King was guaranteed on his surrender to the British troops at Humayun's tomb, the Commission was precluded from passing sentence on him, but it was empowered to extend its enquiries beyond the primary object of ascertaining

¹Certain post Mutiny papers have also been found in one of the bundles ²Parliamentary Papers, no 162 of Session 1859. The proceedings were also separately published.

the guilt or innocence of the accused. In fact the object of the trial was more political than judicial, it was to obtain reliable information respecting the origin and progress of the military rebellion from the witnesses examined and from the documentary evidence produced at the trial. The Commission was therefore not restrained by legal formalities from taking evidence upon any point the elucidation of which might be advantageous to the public interests. The Commissioners met in the Special Hall of Audience on the 27th January 1858 and after a trial lasting till the 9th March found the ex King guilty of all the following four charges —

1st—Aiding and abetting the mutineers of the troops.

2nd—Encouraging and assisting divers persons in waging war against the British Government

3rd—Assuming the sovereignty of Hindustan

4th—Causing and being accessory to the murder of the Christians

In submitting the papers connected with the trial, Mr C B Sanders, Offg Commissioner, Delhi, in his letter dated the 12th April 1858¹ to the Chief Commissioner, Punjab, said as follows —

“The whole of the records found in the Palace or in the Camp of the rebel army and all the numerous vernacular documents of a seditious character which fell into my hands after the final occupation of the city by our troops have been carefully collated and examined and those which directly or indirectly bore upon the conduct of the Rebellion, whether implicating the King or not as well as those which bore his autograph order or signature have been recorded among the proceedings and will be found to disclose many points of interest and importance.” Sir John Lawrence, Chief Commissioner, made the following comments² on the documentary evidence produced at the trial —

“In brief terms, it may be said that the documentary evidence comprises the system in which the general Government was conducted the raising of loans military arrangements the communications with foreign powers and neighbouring chiefs; the passages in the native newspapers relating to the war between the English and the Persians. There are also, of course many papers of a miscellaneous character.”

The papers referring to the system of the King's Government exhibit in a remarkable manner the active personal share which the King himself took in the conduct of affairs. However wrongly he had assumed his position it must be admitted that his orders were not unworthy of the situation. He did make some effort to preserve order in the city, to repress rapine and murder in the villages, to check malversation, to restrain the excesses of the soldiery, but it is clear, from first to last, he was unable to establish an administration either within or without the city. In the tracts nominally ruled by the King, there was scarcely the semblance of authority, nor was there any protection for life or property. In but few cases did the King's agents succeed in collecting revenue from the districts. From his own records, the Mogul rule, while it lasted seems to have been a reign of terror, and a period of intolerable anarchy to the people. Then the papers show the financial straits to which the King was driven, and the numerous forced loans and other contributions exacted from the monied classes in Delhi. The military papers do not materially elucidate the plan of the operations, but they show that the mutinous army was utterly insubordinate to the Government it had set up, and that its discipline was entirely relaxed. The papers comprising the correspondence with other powers indicate the deputations dispatched by the King of Delhi to the Shah of Persia but they do not show any actual connexion between these intrigues and the Bengal mutinies. Whether in the absence of any proof, there is reason to infer such connection, will be considered presently. The correspondence with Indian chiefs, proves that the chiefs round Delhi were in subjection to the King; but there is nothing to show that any considerable number of princes gave in their adhesion, nor that any sovereign or powerful prince intrigued with the King. The extracts from the native newspapers at Delhi certainly breathe a hostile spirit to the British, and abound with absurd stories of the successes of the Persians in the war then waging, and their probable advance upon India."

III

Among the papers press-listed there are the following lists (46 ; 117—19)

- (1) List of persons in the service of the King
- (2) Lists of officers and men who took part in the Mutiny.
- (3) List of the Mutineers in alphabetical order
- (4) List of regiments who joined in the Mutiny, with particulars
- (5) List of sowars belonging to various regiments
- (6) Lists of the regiments giving the names of the officers and men in alphabetical order.

Of the numerous papers which throw interesting side-lights on the doings of the Mutineers, the one relating to the establishment of a Court of Mutineers (57-539) has a peculiar interest of its own. The constitution of the Court was fairly democratic and the Mutineers, although engaged in overthrowing the British Government did not hesitate to use English expressions such as "President" "Vice-President" "Secretary" etc. The members of the Court were very jealous of any interference in their decision by the Princes and against such action on their part they petitioned to the King (57-352). On the other hand one of the papers shows that the Court was suspected of being in league with the English and the King was asked to appoint 4 men to conduct civil and military affairs (60-771). There is another paper which shows that the troops from Neemuch brought with them some dancing girls and an application was made to the Kotwal to accommodate them. To the credit of the Kotwal, it must be said, that he refused to accommodate such ungodly persons (173-4). The anxiety exhibited by the Mughal faction for the susceptibilities of the Hindu Mutineers is prominent in some of the papers; and repeated orders were issued to prevent the sacrifice of cows (61, 245, 265). Astrologers appeared to have been busy in predicting the success of the rebels (15-18) and some mystic calculations were made as to which side would be victorious (72-210).

The fact which appears glaringly prominent throughout is that the men were always clamouring for their pay; threats to desert on the ground of non receipt of wages were frequent and there is no doubt that the financial difficulties of the Mutineers in spite of their many successful attempts at extortion from the rich inhabitants of the city (61-382) greatly crippled them.

In some of the papers (151-17 199-200) the King is found issuing horrible orders for the assassination of Englishmen in different States, but tragically enough, he is weary unto death owing to the lawlessness and insolence of the soldiery the power he is supposed to wield is a hideous mockery, he asks to be conveyed in safety to Khwaja Sahib—a shrine of reputed sanctity near the Kutb—and to be permitted to employ himself in the occupation of sweeper of the shrine he even threatens to commit suicide! (135-167)

IV

Of the pre-Mutiny papers one is a copy of a letter in English dated the 26th March 1858 from A. Stirling, Offg. Secretary to the Government of India to Sir J. L. Colcluncke, Res. Genl. at Delhi stating that the Governor-General had no objection to the purchase of the house for Dr. Indlow by the King but that he was unable to recognise the right of the King to grant an augmentation on the Royal Stipend in payment of the purchase money for any period beyond his life (200-14). Another is a copy of a letter from J Thomason, Lieutenant-Governor of North Western Provinces, to the King, stating that he was unable to forward a letter in Persian which he had written to the Queen of England and advising and asking him to approach the Governor-General (201-19). There is also a diary of Mr Simon Fraser for 8 days from 15th to 23rd September 1855 as recorded by his Munshi (201-57)
